

The City of Boulder and the Undergraduate Interfraternity Council on the hill at the University of Colorado Boulder are pleased to announce an ongoing partnership to improve quality of life on the University Hill for its residents, businesses and visitors. The IFC on the hill has agreed to house the ongoing "Hillanthropy" program that engages CU student organizations in neighborhood clean-up initiatives. The program was created as a partnership between the city and CU student organizations in 2015 as part of the Hill Reinvestment Strategy. Various attempts have been made to reduce litter in the Hill neighborhoods, and the Hillanthropy program has proven to be low-cost and sustainable.

The IFC is committed to organizing and staffing four clean-ups a year around the following key student activity dates: Homecoming (early October), Halloween (late October), St. Patrick's Day (March) and Better Boulder Day (April). The cleanup area will generally be the boundary of the city-funded Residential Service District (RSD) pilot in 2015-2017, an area of the Hill that was identified as the most heavily impacted by student activity.

The program will be supported by the efforts of the Hill Reinvestment neighborhood working group, which meets monthly and includes a representative from the IFC as well as representatives from CU Student Government, Panhellenic, the University Hill Neighborhood Association (UHNA), the Boulder Area Rental Housing Association (BARHA), CU Off Campus Housing and Neighborhood Relations and City Council.
